

hūmānī generis mōrēs tibi nōsse volentī sufficit una domus.

of the human race   the habits   for you   to know   wishing   is sufficient   one home

The diagram shows the Latin sentence 'hūmānī generis mōrēs tibi nōsse volentī sufficit una domus.' with arrows pointing to English equivalents: 'of the human race' (underlined) points to 'hūmānī generis', 'the habits' (underlined) points to 'mōrēs', 'for you' (underlined) points to 'tibi', 'to know' (underlined) points to 'nōsse', 'wishing' (underlined) points to 'volentī', 'is sufficient' (underlined) points to 'sufficit', and 'one home' (underlined) points to 'una domus'. A bracket connects 'for you' and 'to know'.

It is sufficient to study one household if you wish to understand the habits of the human race.

Juveanal, Satires, XIII, 159