Nova Grammatica:

Perfect Passive

Participles:

Participles are part verb and part adjective. They are made from verbs but have adjective endings and act primarily as adjectives.

The perfect passive participle uses 1st and 2nd declension endings and will have an ending that agrees in case, number and gender with the noun it modifies. It acts just like an -us, a, um adjective.

It is translated “having been _____ ed”

- | | | | |
|-----|-------------|-----------------|--------------------------------------|
| ex. | nominative: | servus iussus | - the slave having been ordered |
| | | ancilla iussa | - the slave girl having been ordered |
| | | mercātor iussus | - the merchant having been ordered |
| | | multitūdō iussa | - the crowd having been ordered |

- | | | | |
|--|-----------|---------------------|---|
| | genitive: | servī iussī | - of the slave having been ordered |
| | | ancillae iussae | - of the slave girl having been ordered |
| | | mercātoris iussī | - of the merchant having been ordered |
| | | multitūdinis iussae | - of the crowd having been ordered |

dative:	servō iussō	- to the slave having been ordered ancillae iussae	- to the slave girl having been ordered mercātorī iussō	- to the merchant having been ordered multitūdīnī iussae	- to the crowd having been ordered etc.

The perfect passive participle is the 4th principle part of most verbs. Verbs will hereafter be given with 4 principle parts.

ex. dō, dare, dedī, datus
 rīdeō, rīdēre, rīsī, rīsus
 petō, petere, petīvī, petītus
 veniō, venīre, vēnī, ventus
